Any trip to Taiwan should include a visit to "night markets." A different face of Taiwan comes 11 with the night falling. You can just have fun shopping, eating, and strolling with your friends in the cool of the evening. Every night market has its own 12. My favorite night market is the Shihlin Night Market 13 you can find the island's best-known snacks. Once there, you'll enjoy yourself trying different dishes as well as shopping for 14. One special dish is Super-Sized Huge Chicken Steak. Chicken Steak is the dish 15 in every night market in Taiwan, but the one you can find at Shihlin Night Market can be larger than a person's face. Just the sight of the golden crispy skin makes you want to have a bite of it. Another 16 dish is Shihlin Big Sausages. This snack looks like a hot dog but is much bigger. If your stomach 17 as huge as the Titanic, you would love to try everything in a single visit.

Do you want to make an effective speech? Here are three tips to help you. As everyone knows, being prepared is 18 the most important element. For every hour of your speech, you should need about thirty hours of preparation. And videotaping yourself will help you to get a(n) 19 picture of how you speak. You 20 never overplan. As the saying goes, "21 fails to plan is planning for failure." Another tip is to give of yourself. Use examples from your personal or professional life to 22 your point. In 23 case, be willing to give of yourself by sharing some of yourself with the audience. Finally, you have to plan your body and hand positions. As you practice your speech, look for occasions 24 you can use a gesture. Establish three positions where you will stand—one on center stage, one to your right, and one to your left. Then decide how and 25 what points in your speech you will move. And it is important that you keep eye contact with the audience when you move.

If you are tired of cables, you may consider using devices that use wireless technologies like Wi-Fi or Bluetooth. But do you know the human body may also have a great help? Scientists now have 26 the idea of sending data over the small electric field on the surface of the skin. To do this, we could have a transmitter or a small device like an MP3 player 27 under our skin. This transmitter would then use your skin's electrical field to send data to a receiving device. Since this kind of transmission has a(n) 28 of only twenty centimeters, the receiver would have to be close to a certain part of your body. By using this body network, you wouldn't need a cable to 29 your MP3 player in your pocket 29 the headphones in your ears. 30, you can exchange electronic cards with others by shaking hands or trade music files by dancing cheek to cheek.

Lots of people enjoy going to the cinema for a break from reality. And Scott is one of them. He is the kind of person who has to see new movies 31. Also, the "big screen" effect makes him feel 32 he is right in the scene. To him, no other entertainment 33 seeing a movie on an enormous screen. Though movie tickets cost him a lot more than the rental of a DVD, the audio-visual experience movies offer is incomparable. Besides, waiting for the DVD to come out, more often than not, means running the risk of having some online 34 telling him what is going to happen in the movie. He may lose the 35 of watching the movie for the first time. That's why he is usually among the first to rush into the theater whenever a new movie is released.

Bees are vital to human beings. 36 the United States Department of Agriculture, one-third to our diet relies on these small, hard-working insects. 37 their pollinating services, several important crops wouldn't reach our table. When bees collect nectar, they move pollen from one flower to 38. This allows fruit and crops to grow. Besides assisting with the pollination process, bees provide us with food—honey. The nectar 39 is put into the honeycomb, where bees reduce the amount of water by fanning it with their wings. And this is how honey is made. Honey not only increases one's energy but it is also known to 40 coughs. Thanks to this often under-appreciated insect, we have so many different food products to enjoy.

Prague is one of the most popular tourist destinations in the world. Here are some of the wonders that beckon 4 million visitors to this city every year. One is Prague's most iconic landmark, the 600-year-old Charles Bridge, which is famous for the many statues lining both sides. 41 over the winding Vltava River, it connects Old Town and Lesser Town. During the day, it is always crowded with people. Not only visitors but also painters, musicians and souvenir vendors 42 gather on the bridge. Also on the 43 list is Malá Strana, which means "little quarter." This historic 44 features cobblestone streets, medieval palaces and charming gardens. With all the cultural heritage to explore, it is no wonder Prague 45 among the top three travel destinations in Central Europe.

Gift-giving customs vary from country to country. In the United States, Canada and Europe, workplace gifting is not expected. 46, some companies have rules against employees accepting gifts, considering this action an exchange for something in return. However, it is 47 for houseguests to bring their hosts gifts. Common gifts include candy, flowers, and wine. As for a friend's birthday gift, it can be something personal or 48, such as money. And it is etiquette to open gifts when received. On the other hand, in the Middle East, not only friends but also business partners are likely to give you gifts. And you are supposed to give something back of 49 value. But avoid flowers because they are 50 with funerals. Try to follow these unwritten rules when giving gifts, so you can be a smart gift giver.

IV. Reading Comprehension (10%, @2)

Many new product ideas are discovered in unexpected ways. An example is Covermark, which was created by Lydia O'Leary. Like many people, Lydia O'Leary was born with a dark mark on her skin. Such marks, called birthmarks, can appear anywhere on the body. But they are not usually very large or noticeable. Lydia's, however, was quite red and covered almost her entire face. Lydia's birthmark did not prevent her from getting a good education. But after she graduated from university, she had a hard time finding a job. Companies seemed reluctant to hire someone with a large mark on her face.

From her studies, Lydia knew quite a lot about paint and chemistry. She used her knowledge to create a new kind of skin cream. With it, she was able to cover her birthmark so well that it could not be seen. Her creation improved her image of herself and finally helped her get a job. In 1928, Lydia succeeded in licensing her product with the U.S. government. Soon she was advertising Covermark in magazines and receiving orders for it from women around the country. Later a company called Covermark was founded. Today, it sells a wide variety of products and treatments. All of them are alike in important ways: they look natural, resist water, and protect against the sun's harmful rays. They are also long-lasting and simple to apply.

51. According to this article, what did the product help Lydia do?
(A) Claim a scholarship (B) Save someone's life
(C) Obtain employment (D) Graduate from university
52. Which information about the company's products is given in this passage?
(A) How the products are manufactured (B) Which of the products sell the best
(C) Why the products are in short supply (D) What the products have in common

After recovering from a vicious attack in Pakistan, Malala Yousafzai spoke at the United Nations. In a speech that was heard everywhere, she demanded education for everyone.

Two years later, Malala Yousafzai and another person were jointly presented with the Nobel Peace Prize. At 17, Malala had become the youngest person to ever receive it, and she offered these words. "I'm just a committed and even stubborn person who wants to see every child getting quality education.... I tell my story, not because it is unique, but because it is not.... I'm not a lone voice.... I am those 66 million girls who are deprived of (an) education."

A journalist asked her what she thought about the brutal assault. She smiled and said, "I think they may be regretting that they shot Malala. Now she is heard in every corner of the world." Today Malala lives in the UK and continues her campaign for education.

Many people have found unique ways to their appreciation for Malala. Mary Ann Grainger of Canada saw a photograph of Malala sitting in a hospital bed, reading. Grainger was so moved that she made a sculpture of Malala holding her book. Now Grainger is planning to make copies of the sculpture in a variety of materials. She hopes that they will be installed in libraries, where others can see them and also be encouraged.

Another Canadian, Erinne Paisley, was wondering what to wear for her high school graduation. Instead of buying a dress, she made a paper one from her old homework papers. On the dress, Erinne wrote a few words to express her admiration for Malala and her appreciation for her own education. She also included Malala's Internet address, Malala.org, so that others could learn more about her.

53. What happened to Yousafzai when she was still a teenager?
(A) She was accused of a major crime. (B) She declared bankruptcy.
(C) She was honored with an award. (D) She established her own business.
54. How did Yousafzai refer to herself in her remarks?
(A) As someone who mainly wants revenge. (B) As someone who possesses a strong will.
(C) As someone who is secretly private and easy-going. (D) As someone who cares about her looks.
55. According to this article, which of the following is true about Mary Ann Grainger and Erinne Paisley?
(A) They published articles about Malala. (B) They drew inspiration from Malala.
(C) They've both won competitions. (D) They're interested in fashion.
