One distinctive characteristic of Miyazaki's films is the appearance of strong female characters. Take Chihiro, the ten-year-old main character in Spirited Away, for example. Separated from her parents and forced to face numerous monsters and witches, she must share her love so that she can overcome several __41__ and save her parents. Chihiro's adventure transforms her from a spoiled, whiny child __42__ a responsible, capable girl, and the whole process is similar to the __43__ that occurred in Miyazaki's life.

When Miyazaki was about six, his mother contracted tuberculosis. Her treatment continued during his teenage years, and this meant that Miyazaki had to care for his two younger brothers. __44__, Miyazaki drew pictures and made up stories to entertain them. Gradually, he developed keen drawing skills, a fertile imagination, and the ability to convey stories through images. __45__ his unusual childhood circumstances, Miyazaki might never have gone on creating so many entrancing animated films.

Another early influence on Miyazaki was the work of his father and uncle in the aviation industry. As he was a child, Miyazaki spent hours drawing planes. This led to his lifelong interest in flying. After he started to create his own works, flying naturally became a repeated theme. Miyazaki's various flying vehicles include a witch's broom, massive military vessels, __46__ —often with emphasis on designs that were never, or could never be, possible in real life. Without his early exposure __47__ aviation, Miyazaki would not have been so inspired by flying.

Miyazaki's films stand out also because his characters reflect reality. The characters of Miyazaki's films, unlike __48__ of most typical Hollywood animated films, are neither completely righteous nor completely wicked, which is very true to life and makes his films one of a kind. As a story unfolds, villains reveal certain positive traits, __49__ their violence, evil, and hatred. Good and bad fuse together, and the tension between them gives richness and complexity to Miyazaki's stories. These stories illustrate that there are always positive things __50__ living for: joy to be found, a peaceful resolution to be attempted, and love to be embraced.

Hatred between different groups of people is often the reason behind the most terrifying massacres in human history. Just imagine one out of ten people in your country being killed by neighbors in three months. Tragically, this nightmare became a reality in Rwanda. ___51___ The Tutsis ruled Rwanda for many years until the Hutus overthrew them in the 1950s.

___52___ In 1990 the RPF invaded Rwanda and started a civil war lasting for three years. On April 6, 1994, an airplane carrying the Hutu president was shot down, killing all on board. ___53___ From April 7 to mid-July, 1994, during a period of approximately 100 days, about 80 percent of the Tutsis were brutally killed.

For the victims of the Rwandan Genocide, international intervention came too late. The Rwandan people were shot, stabbed, blown up, burned alive, drowned or beaten to death while the international community did little to stop any of these brutal acts.

___54___ Soon, the United Nations withdrew as well. At the end of April, the U.N. spoke against the killing but refused to step in. Rwanda was left to suffer on their own. Not even young children or old people were spared. ___55___ After almost a million people were dead, on June 22, French troops arrived. Then in July, a new Rwandan government was established, which officially marked the end of one of the darkest chapters in human history.

- (A) Thus began the world-horrifying massacre, in which the Hutus systematically killed members of the Tutsis minority as well as their political enemies.
- (B) They were mercilessly slaughtered.
- (C) Tensions have long existed between the Hutus and the Tutsis in this small country.
- (D) Days after the genocide broke out, France, Belgium and America evacuated their citizens.
- (E) In the violent swift of power, many Tutsis fled to Uganda, where they established their own army, the RPF.

(A) The future of transportation hangs in the balance. In 2006, the world's urban population surpassed its rural population for the first time in history. This rapid urban population growth has strained existing transportation system and made walking and cycling increasingly difficult, prompting more and more people to rely on cars for transportation. The result? Transportation is now the fastest-growing source of greenhouse gas emissions, accounting for 24 percent of global emissions. With the right investments, we can reverse this trend. What can we do?

- Strengthen and expand existing public transportation networks so that they are more convenient and more accessible.
- Investment in public transportation to drastically reduce greenhouse gas emissions while creating jobs and catalyzing economic growth. In the process, we can improve public health and quality of life, as well as increase energy independence and economic security.
- Invest in sustainable transportation technology to create fuel efficient and low-emission vehicles.

Design biking- and walking-friendly cities. With these investments, we can transition to a cleaner, safer, and more affordable transportation infrastructure.

56. Which of the following statements is true?

- A. We should build more new public transportation networks so that they are more convenient.
- B. Creating fuel-efficient and low-emission vehicles is helpful to lead a life of sustainability.
- C. The world's rural population is more than its urban population.
- D. This article promotes the importance of investment.

57. According to this article, what is the fastest-growing source of greenhouse gas emissions?

- A. Bikes B. Nuclear plants C. Transportation D. Factories

58. Better public transportation can lead to many benefits, except _____.

- A. Reducing greenhouse gas emission
- B. Increasing job opportunities
- C. Improving public health and quality of life
- D. Increasing the sales of cars, motorcycles, and bikes

(B) Can you list four facts about Argentina? In spite of the country's size and importance, few people actually know much about this country. Here are some facts about Argentina that you may not know.

- Argentina is the eighth largest country in the world and the second largest in South America.
- The country was once home to some of the world's largest dinosaurs! Over the past 10 years, the bones of multiple giant dinosaurs have been discovered. One enormous creature, "Giganotosaurus" was thought to be 13.2 meters long and weigh nearly 15 tons!
- South America's hottest and coldest weather has been recorded in Argentina. Temperatures can range from 49.1 degrees Celsius to minus 32.8 degrees Celsius.
- Argentina's breathtaking Iguazú Falls has been described as "unlike any other waterfall on earth." It is nearly twice as tall and three times as wide as the famous Niagara Falls. Iguazú Falls, which means "big water," is made up of around 275 waterfalls. Every second, an average of 1,500 cubic meters of water roars and tumbles downward. The falls reach heights of 80 meters and widths of three kilometers. This natural wonder, located between Argentina and Brazil, draws more than one million visitors each year.
- Considered the longest mountain range in the world, the Andes stretch almost 7,242 kilometers. The range runs through Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia, Chile and Argentina. In fact, the Andes form most of Argentina's western edge. The mountain range boasts South America's highest peak, Mount Aconcagua, located in Argentina. At 6,962 meters high, the peak is often referred to as the "roof of the Americas."

59. Which of the following statements about Argentina is true?

- A. It is the eighth largest country in South America.
- B. It is home to the world existing largest dinosaurs.
- C. Mount Aconcagua, situated in Argentina, is the highest peak in South America.
- D. Iguazú Falls runs as much as one million cubic meters of water every day.

60. The term minus 32.8 Celsius represents _____.

- A. 32.8°C
- B. -32.8°C
- C. 32.8°F
- D. -32.8°F

61. The Andes range runs through many countries, except _____.

- A. Argentina
- B. Peru
- C. Colombia
- D. America

(C) People have long had myths about animals. Take, for instance, the idea that camels' humps contain water. In fact, these humps are large, energy-storing fat deposits, weighing up to 36 kilograms. While this fat can produce water, it cannot hydrate the animal. The camel's low body temperature allows water to be retained by the camel for seven days without a drink.

Another myth is that leaving our smell on a baby bird by touching it causes its mother to abandon it. The fact that birds hardly use their sense of smell puts this false idea to rest. Adult birds protect their young no matter what creatures come into contact with them.

Unlike the mice in many children's stories and movies, real mice aren't partial to cheese. Studies show that they prefer foods high in sugar, such as fruit and grain, while cheese disgusts their sensitive noses. Makers of Britain's best-selling mousetrap say peanut butter and chocolate make much better bait.

While it's true that dogs are colorblind, it does not mean that they see everything in black and white. Like colorblind people, dogs are missing one kind of cone in their eyes, which limits their visible range of color. The shades of blue, yellow and gray that they do see can be very helpful as many are farsighted.

Our concept that one human year is equal to seven dog years has been fought about for some time. Many canine experts say that overall dogs age 10.5 years per human year their first two years. After that, dogs age four dog years per human year.

As we become better acquainted with our world, we can put all these myths to rest.

62. Which of the following statements is true?

- A. The camels' humps contain lots of water.
- B. If we touch a young bird, its mother may protect it by using their sense of smell.
- C. Mice like ham more than chocolate.
- D. Colorblind people have limited visible range of color.

63. What can allow camels to endure seven days without water?
 A. The humps . B. The fat. C. The low temperature D. The myth.
64. Which of the following statements is true?
 A. A dog year is equal to seven human years.
 B. The age of a one-year-old dog is equal to that of a four-year-old human.
 C. A dog ages faster than a human.
 D. One human year is equal to 10.5 dog years.
