This is a true story told by a blind man, Harold Krents, in the first-person point of view. He tells, in a ___56___ way, how uncaring or ignorant people can be when they encounter handicapped people. At the end, Krents expresses his wish for people to treat the handicapped with the right attitude.

People often ___57___ me because they think since I'm blind, I must also be deaf. Airport employees would whisper a code to each other when they deal with me, like my blindness is a secret or something that is too embarrassing to talk about ___58___. Some people, ___59___ a waiter in a restaurant and an old lady in the hospital, think I can't talk, either. When they ask me questions, they take it for granted that someone else should answer for me. There surely are people who think I can't work, including recruiters in forty law firms. Fortunately, the government has mandated equal-employment opportunities for the handicapped. I hope one day people can notice our abilities ___60___ our disabilities.

(A) focus on (B) discourage (C) thank for (D) unlike (E) work as

Wu couldn't believe it when he saw that Michelle Obama, the First Lady of the U.S., was wearing an evening gown he designed during President Obama's inauguration. Ever wonder why you're constantly tired or having chapped lips? After all, you've taken your share of vitamins or other dietary supplements, but things are not improving. Well, you might have overlooked something that is, incidentally, within easy reach – water. Fatigue and unhealthy skin are two common but easily ___66___ symptoms of dehydration. "But I don't sweat that much and anyway I don't feel thirsty," you might protest. In fact, sweating is just one of the ___67___ through which we lose water. Many of our bodily functions run on water, too. One such example is digestion. What's more, water makes people feel full and helps reduce their desire to eat large ___68___. So this is very good news to those trying to shed a few pounds. Another little known benefit of regular and sufficient water consumption is that it ___69___ pain. Also, since some of the body's toxins can lead to acne or other skin problems, drinking enough water helps ___70___ the toxins, bringing a smile to your face every time you look in the mirror. So drink up!

Nothing bothers us more than the buzzing noise from a flying mosquito when we are sleeping. And more often than not, we will end up with itchy red welts on our bodies. So, what can we do to keep these irritating insects ___71___? Research has shown that mosquitoes bite some people more than others. These include ___72___ are pregnant, have a higher-than-normal body temperature or have type O blood. If you are a mosquito magnet, stay inside ___73___ possible, especially at dawn and dusk when mosquitoes are more likely to bite. It is also advised to wear light, bright colors as dark colors attract the insects. Another useful thing to do is rubbing mosquito ___74___ on exposed skin. The most effective ones are those containing DEET. But since DEET products may cause health and environmental problems, some people prefer plant oils, like lemon eucalyptus and citronella. Mosquito coils also keep mosquitoes away. ___75___, the smoke from them pollutes and can damage the lungs, so they should be used with care. With the climate getting warmer, make sure you try the above methods to avoid mosquito bites.

V. Reading Comprehension (10%, @2)

As spring hits and the weather gets warmer, many students in the United States enjoy competing in track and field events across the country. Commonly referred to as “track” in the U.S., track and field is also known as “athletics” in other areas of the world. Unlike other sports, track includes a wide range of different types of competitions: from running to jumping to throwing.

All events take place outside. Runners compete in events on an oval track, while competitions in jumping and throwing take place in the center field. Running events include everything from very short distance sprints all the way to the 10,000 meter event. Many runners compete in multiple events while some athletes specialize in just a single event.

Great athletes in track often serve as an inspiration to others. Fanny Blankers-Koen for example, set a world record in the 80m hurdles a year after giving birth to her first child. Then, despite being told she was too old, she won four gold medals at the 1948 Olympics!

Usain Bolt is another inspiring example of not giving up on one’s dreams. In the 2004 Olympics, Usain had an injury that prevented him from competing well. Then, he suffered more injuries in 2005 and 2006. However, he returned in the 2008 Olympics to not only win three gold medals, but also set new Olympic and world records!

76 . Based on the reading, which of the following is the best possible definition for the word sprint?

- A. To run together with a teammate
- B. To jog at a fast pace for a long way
- C. To run and jump over a high metal bar
- D. To run very quickly for a short period of time

77. What is the main point of paragraphs three and four?

- A. The stories of successful track athletes can encourage others to pursue their goals.
- B. Track and field competitions have a long history dating back to the ancient times.
- C. Usain Bolt and Fanny Blankers-Koen became rich and famous after winning medals.
- D. Not everyone is cut out to be a top athlete like the men and women we see on TV.

78. Which of the following statements is true about track events?

- A. Most track athletes compete in team events.
- B. Americans refer to track and field as “athletics”.
- C. Most throwing events occur in a special separate building.
- D. Athletes are allowed to compete in more than one event.

We walk over them, drive over them, and sometimes even dread them. Bridges are examples of great design and beauty that often don’t receive much attention. However, they should be seen, studied and experienced with appreciation. A quick look at the world’s greatest bridges will give anyone a desire to travel.

A well-known example found in San Francisco, California is a great place to start. It's possible that more people know this bridge by sight than anything else. Of course, the city's red-orange Golden Gate Bridge is basically a movie star. And while it's no longer the world's longest suspension bridge, it's still the prettiest.

Moving to Europe, there are many historical bridges that have existed for many years. The Ponte Vecchio in Florence, Italy makes this clear with a name meaning "Old Bridge." It dates back to the Romans but was last rebuilt in 1345. It is also the only bridge in Florence that didn't fall during World War II.

Many bridges are wonderful to look at, but some are amazing to use. Japan's Akashi Strait Bridge is the world's longest suspension bridge at nearly 2,000 meters. Plans for the bridge were made when two ferries sank and killed 168 in 1955. Now the bridge makes travel much safer for many Japanese locals.

Finally, some bridges are reminders of the relationships they create. The Suez Canal Bridge starts in Egypt and ends at the Sinai Peninsula. This creates a nearly 4-kilometer road between Africa and Eurasia! The Japanese helped Egypt pay for and build the bridge as well. This makes it a great example of a bridge's purpose – to bring people together.

79. Why was the Akashi Strait Bridge built?

- A. It was built because of the past terrible accidents.
- B. It was built to be the longest bridge in the world.
- C. It was built to make travel more convenient for locals.
- D. It was built because of old and dangerous roads.

80. Which of the following is NOT a way that the Suez Canal Bridge reminds us of relationships?

- A. It is a road built by two countries.
- B. The road travels between continents.
- C. The leaders of two countries crossed the bridge together.
- D. One country helped the other pay for and build the bridge.
