There are many differences between Chinese and Western cultures 41. the naming customs. Chinese people do not 42. the ancestors' given names to show respect for their elders and ancestors. In some Western countries, however, it is common for parents to 43. their children 43. ancestors as a way of honoring their elders. In addition, in Chinese society, people usually keep the surnames of their fathers; in many Spanish-speaking countries, 44., people take the family names of both their fathers and mothers.

Even though family links are shown in names, some unique rules exist. In Iceland, a person takes his or her father's first name as a last name. For example, a boy named Erik born 45. a father named Lars would be named Erik Larsson. For the Yami people of Taiwan, nevertheless, the naming tradition works 46.. In this culture, the father changes his name upon the birth of his first son. 47., a father who names his son Lamboan would change his own name to Shaman Lamboan, meaning "Father of Lamboan."

But, not all cultures suggest family relationships in their naming system. The 48. in Myanmar, a country in the Southeast Asia, is for people go without a surname.

Humans have always dreamed of flying like birds. Thanks to the hang glider, now almost anyone can join the birds in the sky! What is a hang glider? It's a lot like a large kite. A hang glider can only glide down to the ground, unless the pilot is able to find a rising current of air. You can find rising air where wind is rushing up a hill or cliff or where there is a thermal.

Would you be scared to fly a hang glider? Hang-gliding may be safer than you think! Pilots watch the weather carefully to make sure the wind isn't too strong to fly. They also wear a parachute just in case something should happen. Accidents do happen, but in most cases it's because the pilot chose to take an extra risk.

Perhaps you are interested in hang-gliding, but you are not sure if you want to go ahead and buy a glider. No problem! A great way to start hang-gliding is to sign up for a tandem flight. If you really enjoy the tandem flight, you can find a class to get you started in hang-gliding. Many first classes will provide a glider to train with so you don't need to buy one right away.

57. Why do hang glider pilots need to find currents of rising air?
- (A) Because they can then do all kinds of amazing tricks in the air.
  - (B) Because they can find the best places to land based on the rising air.
  - (C) Because they will quickly glide down to the ground without them.
  - (D) Because they will get too hot and will need fresh air to cool them off.
58. What is an example of a dangerous extra risk a pilot might take?
- (A) Not using rising air currents.
  - (B) Taking a nap while in the air.
  - (C) Trying to fly with a flock of birds.
  - (D) Flying during strong, gusty wind.

Dear Student,

This Days for Girls feminine hygiene kit was sewn just for you! The Toronto chapter of Days for Girls meets every two weeks. We discuss how we can empower young women like you and give you valuable information! We were so concerned to learn that many girls like you may become high school dropouts because of missing days of school during your menstrual period. We want to make sure you can go to school every day!

This colorful kit was made by hand and contains two pairs of underwear, a washcloth, two waterproof shields, and eight absorbent pads. There is also a plastic bag and a small bar of soap. You can use this to clean the items in your kit. Hang them in the sun to dry. The light of the sun will also help kill germs. If you maintain your kit properly it can last for up to three years! All of the fabric was donated by members of our chapter and different parts were sewn by different people. Then we all got together to assemble the kits! It was a fun day for us.

We hope you like the kit and the colorful drawstring bag it comes in. We chose bright patterns that will be fashionable and functional! Most of all, we hope you will teach others about good feminine hygiene and always take good care of yourself! Remember, your body is the only one you get!

Sincerely,

Sarah Kaplan, DFG Toronto

Cats are loved by people all over the world because of their grace, beauty, and strong, independent personalities. The ancient Egyptians worshipped cats as gods, and today in Africa, the lion is known as “king of the beasts.” In the United States, cats are one of the most popular house pets, and many Americans love their cats so much that they think of them as another member of the family. No wonder there are many English expressions that use the word cat.

The American dream, for example, is to become a fat cat, a term for a wealthy and powerful person. But even those without a lot of money can still afford to take a cat nap, or a short rest, every now and then. However, it is not considered good to act like a cat—to cat around, playing and sleeping too much, and living an aimless or selfish life.

People have always admired cats for their athletic abilities and their sense of balance, and also for their very quiet way of doing things. That's why we use the term cat burglar to describe a talented thief, one who can quietly sneak away with something valuable without anyone noticing. We also use the expression the cat's got your tongue to mean you cannot speak or don't know what to say. Because cats are such expert predators in hunting and eating smaller animals, we often talk about a game of cat and mouse, which refers to any difficult challenge that requires strategy and skill, or also one in which a powerful person is teasing or acting cruelly towards someone weaker. “When the cat's away, the mice will play” is another common cat idiom. It means that when the teacher leaves the room, the students will become wild and crazy, or when a teenager's parents are out of town, he or she will invite friends over for a big party.

Because cats are often running away from dogs, American children will tease a friend who is afraid of something by calling him or her a scaredy-cat or a fraidy-cat. Another popular name used to tease someone is copycat, used to describe a person who talks, dresses or acts just like someone else. Another cat expression can be used when your best friend tells you an important secret: you have to remember not to let the cat out of the bag, meaning not to tell anyone else. And be careful, because if you do tell your friend's secret, the two of you could end up fighting like cats and dogs.
