(B) We bring people together in the fight against avoidable blindness. We know we can't do it all on our own so we work with partners to evaluate the specific needs of each region, help develop a tailored plan to restore sight and put in place a long-term eye health strategy.

We educate communities about eye health, and with the help of key partners, give out vital antibiotics to treat and prevent serious eye conditions. We provide crucial eye health information via radio broadcasts, film screenings and educational materials.

In Ethiopia for example, we help implement the World Health Organisation's SAFE strategy alongside partners such as the UK Department for International Development, Fred Hallows, Sightsavers and the Ministry of Health to help eliminate trachoma, a painful, contagious and blinding disease.

We establish permanent presences or long-term country programs, and build the capacity of health systems to improve access to quality eye care. We train all types of workers across all levels of the health system - not just eye doctors and nurses, but leadership and governance - to help improve the long term quality of patient care.

75. The purpose of this article is to _____.

- A. tell people how serious the problem of blindness is B. educate people about the eye care
C. invite people to join the activity and donate money D. tell people what the organization has been doing

C. Orbis trains eye doctors, nurses, not leadership. D. The services that Orbis provides are short-term.

78. We provides important eye health information through many ways, except _____.

- A. broadcasts B. films C. educational materials D. governments

(C) Known as Boxing Day, it started in Great Britain and spread to the former colonies of the British Empire, including Canada, Australia, and South Africa. In most of these places it's also an official holiday, which is helpful to those who need an extra day to recover from having eaten and drunk too much on Christmas Day!

The origin of the holiday's name is unclear, but everyone agrees that it has nothing to do with the fighting sport. One theory is that hundreds of years ago it was traditional to give servants—who had to work on Christmas— a box of money or gifts to thank them for their service. Others say it comes from a practice of setting out a box for charity in December. This would then be opened the day after Christmas so that the money could be given to the needy.

Boxing Day celebrations vary from country to country, though most people treat the holiday as an extra day to relax with friends and family. Many countries feature major sporting events like soccer matches, hockey games, and horse racing. In other countries, people take advantage of the post-Christmas sales that begin on Boxing Day.

There are also those who observe the charitable roots of the holiday. In South Africa, where the name of the holiday was changed to the Day of Goodwill, people donate money, clothes, and food to those in need. Some in the United Kingdom add a bit of silliness to the day by taking part in the Boxing Day Dip. This involves diving into the cold sea, often in fancy dress and sometimes in a Santa hat, to raise money for different causes.

79. Which of the following statements is wrong?

- A. Canada, Austria, and South Africa were all former colonies of Great Britain.
- B. The Boxing Day has no relation to the sport of boxing.
- C. Servants used to get a box of gifts or money on Boxing Day because they had to work on Christmas Day.
- D. Boxing Day celebrations are not always the same in different countries.

80. In _____, the Boxing Day is called the Day of Goodwill.

- | | | | |
