Pakistan has a large number of children without access to education. There are laws legislating free schooling, but not enough practical work has been done. 46 An organization named Citizen's Education Development Foundation is working to bring education to these kids. In 1993, they turned a bus into a mobile school and started teaching.

47 Meanwhile, the inside is equipped with chairs, desks, and a large blackboard. The bus school operates every day except Sunday. It can serve up to forty students at a time, in classes of two hours each, for four rounds a day. Students are between the ages of 5 and 14, and are taught individually to match their learning level. 48 Sometimes, other subjects such as math and English are taught. The atmosphere in the school is friendly, like a big family.

49 Parents who did not know how to get their kids into school are now much more informed. As for the students, once they gain enough basic reading and writing skills, they can advance to regular schools. Many have acquired jobs that they couldn't have done without education provided by the mobile school. 50 To this day, this school on wheels continues to change children's lives.

- (A) The outside of the bus is brightly painted, looking cheerful and friendly.
 (B) Thus, in addition to providing education, mobile schools have provided access to a better future.
 (C) As a result, the poor are often excluded from the public education system.
 (D) The mobile school has improved people's lives in many ways.
 (E) A teacher and an assistant guide the students through the basics of reading and writing.

Many successful CEOs wake up early. Tim Cook, Indra Nooyi, and Bob Iger all begin their days before 5am. The early bird gets the worm! Early to bed, early to rise! Right? Not necessarily. Although night owls don't have a reputation for productivity, it turns out this has nothing to do with the time of day they wake up, but rather how much they understand themselves. Adam Grant explains. "The world's most successful people aren't worried about what time others wake up. They wake and work on the schedule that works for them."

According to Adam, you should be who you are and stop trying to be someone you're not. If you're more productive in the morning, great! But if you find that you get more done when most people are already in bed, then go with that. Forcing yourself into another person's schedule isn't a good idea. This will only cause exhaustion and frustration. Self-motivation is the key, no matter what your schedule is like. Be who you are and get work done when you can. The time of day you complete tasks isn't important. After all, success is all about what you accomplish, not when you accomplish it.

51. What lesson does the author of this article share?

- (A) The earlier you wake up, the more you get done.
- (B) In order to be successful, you need to do things first thing in the morning.
- (C) Figure out when you work best, even if it's at night.
- (D) Most successful businesspeople get up early and go to bed late.

52. What do most people think about when they hear the words, "night owls"?

- (A) They think of people who don't achieve much.
- (B) They think of people who never stop working.
- (C) They think of people who will never quit.
- (D) They think of people who are extremely wealthy.

53. What happens to people who try to get up early but aren't inclined to do so naturally?

- (A) They end up feeling more joyful overall.
- (B) They wonder why they never tried this beforehand.
- (C) They eventually learn to get up early.
- (D) They feel tired and annoyed at themselves.

No two human faces are exactly alike. The differences, great and small, in human facial features are what allow us to recognize one another and to confirm someone's identity. Machines can now be taught to recognize these same facial differences, and systems with this ability are both amazingly useful and somewhat scary.

More and more, banks, governments, police departments and other organizations around the world are using facial recognition technology. It allows them to quickly determine who someone is. Becoming ever more powerful and widespread, these systems can quickly recognize a face in a huge sports audience, on the street, or anywhere there's a linked camera. In addition to organizations, a growing number of ordinary individuals are also embracing facial recognition technology. They use it instead of passwords or other identifiers to unlock their phones, computers and even their front doors.

In spite of facial recognition technology's many benefits, there are also reasons for concern about its growing power and presence. The main concern is that it can weaken or even eliminate privacy. The more cameras there are in public places, the more fully people can be watched and tracked. Even though they may not be worried about being caught doing something wrong, many people are very uncomfortable with being watched all the time.

54. Why are more people all right with the use of facial recognition technology?

- (A) It provides more options for security systems.
- (B) It helps businesses stay more secure and makes life more efficient.
- (C) It increases a person's ability to remember other people's names.
- (D) It has just become a part of life without people realizing it.

55. What warning does the writer provide about the use of facial recognition technology?

- (A) It is expensive to obtain and even more costly to maintain.
- (B) It might replace the need for face-to-face human interaction.
- (C) It could take away any sense of confidentiality.
- (D) It will be difficult to do things if the Internet breaks down.

56. What is implied about facial recognition technology?
- (A) It is being adopted by many people at a rapid pace.
  - (B) It is going to provide data only to the biggest companies.
  - (C) It is a fad for now and won't be around long-term.
  - (D) It will take time to convince all organizations to use it.

(c)

Everyone knows that successful relationships are the key to a happy life. But did you know there is a magic formula backed by research that can ensure that your relationships last? It's called the 5:1 Ratio. The 5:1 Ratio helps to measure how a couple handles conflict. It's very specific, and very effective. To make love last, there needs to be five positive interactions for every one negative interaction. For example: say you and your significant other are in an argument. Saying something rude or hurtful counts as a negative interaction. So does rolling your eyes or stomping away. For each one of these negative actions there should be five positive interactions you make. Take, for example, the squeeze of the hand. This shows your partner that, though you are in the middle of a fight, you still care. Another positive thing to try is making a joke to defuse tension.

The 5:1 ratio isn't just for couples. Work relationships and friendships can also benefit! Though you may not want to squeeze your coworker's hand, saying something kind or giving a small gift can go a long way in keeping the relationship happy. Everyone has some sort of relationship in their life, and conflict is inevitable. Using the 5:1 ratio as a baseline for how you handle difficulties can help with ensuring successful partnerships.

57. Why does the author call the 5:1 Ratio "magic"?
- (A) Because it doesn't take any effort at all.
  - (B) Because it involves the use of a mysterious number.
  - (C) Because it requires people to chant a certain phrase.
  - (D) Because it works quickly and consistently.
58. What is one way to put the 5:1 Ratio into practice?
- (A) Stop listening to the other person if it's getting annoying.
  - (B) Show a kind gesture even if you are arguing.
  - (C) Walk away from the situation before you get angry.
  - (D) Only fight if you haven't done so in the past 5 days.
59. What is the goal of this article?
- (A) To help people improve their relationships.
  - (B) To show how mature people have a debate.
  - (C) To give ideas on taking care of your spouse.
  - (D) To let others know that no one is truly happy.

(d)

Essential oils play an important role in the production of perfume. The most common way of collecting essential oils is steam distillation. It uses heated steam to extract essential oils from the plant materials. The process begins with heating water to produce steam. As the steam goes up and passes through the raw plant materials, the heat makes them release essential oils. Then the steam carrying the essential oils keeps going into the cooling tube. There the steam cools and turns back into liquid form. The liquid then drips down from the tube into a container beneath. Since essential oils don't dissolve in water and are lighter than water, the liquid will narratively separate into two years. The essential oils float to the top, and the water stays on the bottom.

註: essential oils 精油 steam distillation 蒸氣蒸餾 extract 提取 dissolve 溶解

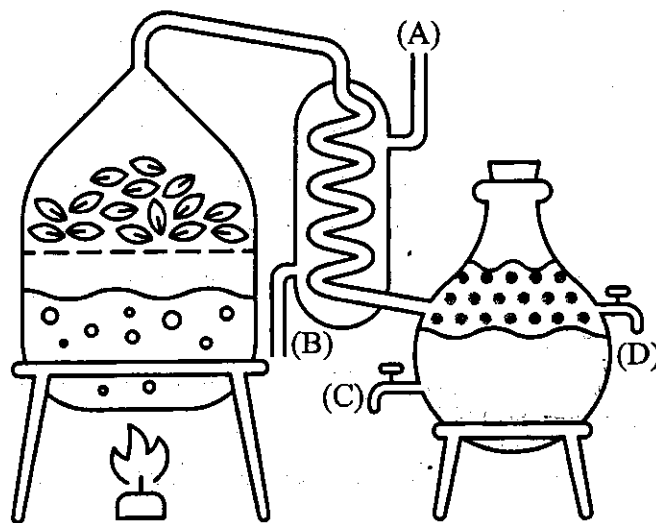

60. What is the passage mainly about?
- (A) Different types of essential oils.
  - (B) The reason why essential oils float.
  - (C) Equipment for making essential oils.
  - (D) The method for producing essential oils.

61. Based on the passage, put the following steps in the correct order.

- (A) Boil the water to create steam.
 (B) Plant materials release essential oils.
 (C) Essential oils and water are separated.
 (D) The steam as well as essential oils cools and becomes liquid.
